Share the Harvest Allows Missouri Hunters to Help Neighbors Facing Hunger

SIKESTON, MO (Nov. 3, 2022) – Once again this year, Missouri’s Share the Harvest program will allow deer hunters to donate venison to families and individuals facing hunger in their communities.

“Protein is one of our most-requested items, but it is also one of the most expensive and difficult to source,” said Joey Keys, chief executive officer of Southeast Missouri Food Bank. “The Share the Harvest program is a great way for local hunters to give back to their communities and avoid wasting their harvest.”

Share the Harvest is administered by the Conservation Federation of Missouri and the Missouri Department of Conservation, and processing costs of the donated meat is covered by the program.

To participate in the program, a hunter just needs to take a deer to an approved meat processor and let them know how much venison you want to donate. (According to the Missouri Department of Conservation, deer harvested within the CWD Management Zone must be tested; more details are available at <https://mdc.mo.gov/hunting-trapping/species/deer/share-harvest>.)

In SEMO Food Bank’s service area, the approved meat processors are: Elderland Meats in Zalma, Jackson Frozen Foods in Jackson, Ozark Meats in Grandin, Walker's Meat Processing in Fredericktown, Stonie’s Sausage Shop in Perryville, Oberle Meats in Ste. Genevieve and Piedmont Processing in Piedmont.

Once a deer has been donated and processed, the meat will be distributed to one of the food bank’s partner agencies to be shared with families and individuals facing hunger.

Southeast Missouri Food Bank serves more than 70,000 individuals each month through a network of 140 partner agencies and other programs. The food bank’s 16-county service area has some of the highest rates of hunger in the state, where one in six families and one in five children are food insecure.
